

WHO WE ARE

Most hotel companies promise connection. We're built around it differently.

Arbus Hospitality is a Brooklyn-based hotel management company founded by Stephen Chan and Erik Warner, backed by The Center for Responsible Hospitality. Our name comes from the arbuscular mycorrhizal network, the underground system that connects trees, shares resources, and makes forests stronger than any single tree could be alone.

That's not just a metaphor. It's how we operate: design, service, community, and land working as a single interconnected system. Not siloed departments executing against a brand standard.

We manage properties that are genuinely of their place and unmistakably Arbus in how they feel.

OUR PORTFOLIO

One operating philosophy. Many distinct places.

Arbus properties aren't sub-brands or scaled concepts. Each is shaped by its land, its community, and the specific character of the place, then operated with the same underlying intelligence: high standards, genuine hospitality, and the kind of detail that earns return visits.

For groups, this matters. You're not booking a cookie-cutter meeting package in a building that happens to have a view. You're booking a place with its own identity and a team that knows how to make it work for you.

From the North Fork waterfront to the Teton mountains, every Arbus property is designed to give your people somewhere worth being. Not just somewhere to meet.
